George M. Wallace. NEW HAVEN, Conn., June 20 .- After spending last evening at a reunion cele-bration with his class, Yale, '81, George M. Wallace, one of the leading attorneys of this city, died here to-day of cerebral LONDON, June 20 .- A necklace of 193 remorrhage. He was 60 years old and for almost forty years had taken an active general alumni meeting, which was the features of alumni day in Yale's commencement week, was converted into a military meeting. Instead of discussing Yale problems as in previous years the time was devoted to a discussion of Yale's programme of preparedness. That Yale to-day placed herself in favor of cumpulsory military training was the enalty of conclusion to be drawn from the remarks of the alumni. Furthermore, the military sprint was evidenced by the fact that the members of '96 S., the reunion class that came back dressed as solders and has lived in tents ever politics to contend with at all times and at all angles—witness the recent experience of leading the alumni parade to Yale Field.

since its return, were given the honor of leading the alumni parade to Yale Field.

Edward J. Phelps of Chicago, chairman of the alumni meeting and in his introductory remarks showed the Yale graduate feeling when he said: "What is the uppermost thought in the minds of Yale graduates? The war in Europe and the complications that have arisen on our own border. How are we, as Yale men, prepared to meet this crisis? We must meet it thoughtfully, courageously, unselfishly, firm in the belief that Yale must play her part. The ultimate object of a Yale education is service to our fellow men."

The members of the class of '66, back for their fiftleth reunion, occupied the seats of honor on the platform with the sepaker and when Chairman Phelps concluded there was a wild burst of applause.

Karl H. Behr of New York, a member of the Sale with the sum of the seats of the class of the University of Wisconsin, the free the Wisconsin, the university of Wisconsin, the university of Wisconsin, the writings and reports.

"The teachings, the writings and the professors in State owned universities are scrutinized and criticised by the devotees of protection and criticised by the devotees of protections and criticised by the devotees of protections and criticised by the devotees of protection and criticised by the devotees of protections and criticised by the dev tration under Fresident Thomas and the results were already apparent on the campus and elsewhere. "Americans must do something besides talk patriotism," he said. "Something more is needed than patriotic speeches, prepared edness parades and newspaper articles. It is time now for compulsory military service in this country." Mr. Behr's remarks were greeted with cheers and appliance by Yale men of every age and class.

Henry T. Rogers of Denver, who spoke for the class of '66, back for the fiftieth reunion, expressed himself as strongly in favor of compulsory military training. He was about to express regret that Yale had not introduced into its curriculum a course in military instruction which should count toward a decree when he was interrupted by President Hadley, who said that such action had been taken by the faculty. Mr. Rogers then said ne hoped this course would not continue to be an elective but a requirement in both undergraduate departments of the university.

President Hadley spoke for the university as its president Hadley spoke for the university.
